

Global Real Estate Commentary – Q1 2023

Review of Q1 2023 Market Performance

Global real estate stocks posted slight gains in the first quarter of 2023, as the multiple exogenous factors that weighed on the capital markets (e.g., central bank tightening to rein in inflation, the war in Ukraine, China's efforts to contain COVID-19, and the regional bank mini-crisis) continued to distract investors, causing them to keep their attention focused mostly away from industry and company fundamentals. The FTSE EPRA Nareit Developed Index had a total return of 1.04% for the quarter.¹

A historical review of listed real estate returns during periods of high inflation serves as a reminder that real estate values tend to increase with inflation, as rising inflation is typically an indicator of a growing economy – the most important driver of demand for most property types. Additionally, commercial real estate leases often incorporate annual rent escalators, helping to provide additional protection of real estate cash flows during inflationary periods.

Higher energy prices, particularly in Europe, may reduce consumer spending and negatively impact sectors exposed to discretionary spending. Notably, the portfolio is positioned defensively in Europe, with a substantial portion of its European holdings invested in German residential companies, whose fundamentals are not only unimpacted by rising energy prices, but are in fact bolstered by increased demand for housing, spurred by the tide of migrants fleeing the Ukraine. Other European positions are similarly insulated from the economic fallout of the conflict in Ukraine, with Specialty property type positions (e.g., Cell Towers, Student Housing and Medical Office Buildings) representing the bulk of the portfolio's remaining European exposure.

Regional Bank Stress

The regional bank mini-crisis, thus far, has revealed the lagged effect of rate hikes to date—and the resulting duration mismatch that created an inherent instability among the deposit base. Uncertainty among lenders over the regulatory response (what adjustments if any will be made to the current $250k per account FDIC insurance limit) will likely have a chilling effect on their willingness to make new loans and/or re-finance existing ones. The flipside is that the resulting tightening of credit will do some of the Fed's work for it, thus shifting the narrative around future rate hikes from “higher, faster and for longer” to “lower for shorter.” Thus, the path forward in terms of potential impact on the business of commercial real estate will be determined largely, if not solely by the Fed and the Treasury acting in concert to contain and thus prevent the isolated challenges at a small number of regional banks from evolving into widespread contagion that could present a systemic challenge.

Listed REITs enjoy access to all four quadrants of the capital markets (public and private, debt and equity), providing them with greater access to capital than is typically available to their private real estate counterparts. Moreover, public REITs typically operate with lower leverage than do most private real estate companies – thus further insulating them from any disruptions in the capital markets. Accordingly, any stress that emerges in the regional banking system will no doubt have greater impact on private real estate companies than on public real estate companies.

As to the implications or ramifications for Ranger Global's portfolios, we have evaluated all companies owned with an eye toward identifying any that have near-term re-financing risk. We have determined that none of the companies owned in the portfolio have any debt maturities until 2025. As a further test we evaluated each company's exposure to variable-rate debt and determined that none of the companies owned in the portfolio have an amount that exceeds our comfort level as well as prudent amounts that are consistent with their capital formation cycles and overall financial flexibility.

Finally, as it relates to the highly challenging outlook for central business district ("CBD") office buildings, the impact of fundamental changes in how companies manage their office space needs in the new world order of hybrid work models, owners of CBD office buildings will experience significant headwinds over the next five plus years as existing leases expire and tenants downsize their space needs. The ensuing erosion of value will in some ways be similar to the secular decline in regional malls resulting from the "Amazon effect", i.e., the disruptive impact of e-commerce. Just as the commercial real estate industry writ large managed to thrive in the face of substantial value destruction in the regional mall sector (which at one time had a larger market capitalization than the office sector), it is certainly plausible that the coming difficulties in CBD office can be contained without spreading to other sectors.

Attribution of the Portfolio's Q1 2023 Performance²

Key contributors and detractors to the portfolio's relative performance over the first quarter are outlined below:

- The portfolio's positioning in the Cell Towers sector was a contributor to relative returns vs. the benchmark, resulting from our overweight allocation and stock selection. The portfolio also benefited from its underweight and stock selection in the Office sector and its overweight and stock selection in the Data Center and Student Housing sectors.
- The portfolio's stock selection in the Industrial, Self-Storage, and Net Lease sectors detracted from relative returns. We believe that the sell-off in Specialty property types with strong growth prospects, such as Data Centers and Cell Towers, has presented attractive value investment opportunities.

Conclusion

Despite the macroeconomic noise capturing headlines, our outlook for the global real estate market continues to be constructive. Real estate fundamentals and earnings growth remain strong amidst an environment characterized by low supply in many sectors, paired with high construction costs.

Our high conviction, benchmark-agnostic investment approach allows us to maintain a laser-focus on identifying and owning only the 50 highest-quality companies in our investable universe. We have high conviction in our fundamental research and confidence in the management teams of the companies we own. While global capital markets continue to experience periods of market fixation on non-fundamental factors, we believe our portfolio is well positioned as investor attention turns back to fundamentals.

 RANGER GLOBAL

Ranger Global Real Estate Advisors, LLC is an independent, SEC-registered investment advisor focused exclusively on the active management of portfolios of liquid global real estate securities on behalf of institutional and individual investors. The firm was co-founded in 2016 by Andrew J. Duffy, CFA (Chief Investment Officer) and F. Scott Tuck (Senior Advisor), West Point classmates and U.S. Army Rangers with nearly 30 years each of institutional asset management experience. The hallmarks of our investment strategy are concentrated portfolios with significant overweight to higher growth, high-quality companies, including Ranger's pioneering investment across Specialty property types, as well as highly favorable upside and downside market capture, making our portfolios attractive either as a standalone investment or as a complement to a private real estate portfolio.

Ranger Global is majority-owned by its employees and minority-owned by our strategic partner, QuadReal Property Group, a Canadian-based private real estate manager with approximately $70 billion (CAD) in assets under management. We seek to maintain an entrepreneurial culture which aligns the interests of our clients with those of our employees and stakeholders.

QuadReal Property Group is a global real estate investment, operating and development company headquartered in Vancouver, British Columbia, managing total assets of approximately $70 billion (CAD). From its foundation in Canada as a full-service real estate operating company, QuadReal has expanded its capabilities to invest equity and debt in both the public and private markets around the globe. As an operating and development company, the firm is also able to invest across the entire life cycle of properties, from pre-development through to stabilization. QuadReal's flexible business strategy enables the firm to invest directly, via programmatic partnerships, and through operating companies in which it holds an ownership interest.

QuadReal, its operating companies, and partners share in their investment convictions, business values, and the commitment to take performance to the next level. QuadReal works with its partners to accelerate their growth and together cultivate value by unlocking innovation and sharing joint expertise. In addition to capital, QuadReal provides its partners with the in-house expertise of the broad-based QuadReal Resources Group.

QuadReal employs over 1200 real estate professionals located across Canada as well as in Hong Kong, London, New York, and Los Angeles. QuadReal seeks to deliver strong investment returns while creating sustainable environments that bring value to the people and communities it serves. Now and for generations to come.

Defined Terms and Disclosures

Defined Terms

Core Real Estate: Ranger Global defines Core as property types that are more highly correlated to GDP growth and typically fall into Office, Industrial, Retail, and Multi-Family Property types.

Specialty Real Estate: Ranger Global defines Specialty as a disparate group of non-core property types which typically exhibit a number of distinctive investment characteristics:

- Specialty property types generally operate in an environment of favorable supply-demand dynamics, conveying superior pricing power to landlords;
- Specialty property types typically generate higher growth rates than core property types;
- Demand for Specialty property types is generally a product of idiosyncratic demand drivers that are un-correlated to GDP growth

Examples of Specialty property types include: Data Centers, Cell Towers, Student Housing, Medical Office, Self-Storage, Manufactured Home Communities, Timber, Outdoor Advertising, Single-Family Rental, Life Science/Lab Space, Leisure and Infrastructure. The universe of Specialty real estate companies is expanding quickly and constantly evolving.

FTSE EPRA Nareit Developed Index: an Index comprised of publicly-traded real estate securities in developed countries worldwide which have met certain financial criteria for inclusion in the Index. Each company must derive the bulk of its earnings through the ownership, management or development of income-producing commercial real estate.

Disclosures

Past performance is not a guarantee nor a reliable indicator of future results. As with any investment, there are risks. There is no assurance that any portfolio will achieve its investment objective. The portfolio is subject to stock market risk, which is the risk that stock prices overall will decline over short or long periods, adversely affecting the value of an investment. Risks of one's ownership are similar to those associated with direct ownership of real estate, such as changes in real estate values, interest rates, cash flow of underlying real estate assets, supply and demand and the creditworthiness of the issuer. International investing poses special risks, including currency fluctuations and economic and political risks not found in investments that are solely domestic.
